About the DMZ and CCL

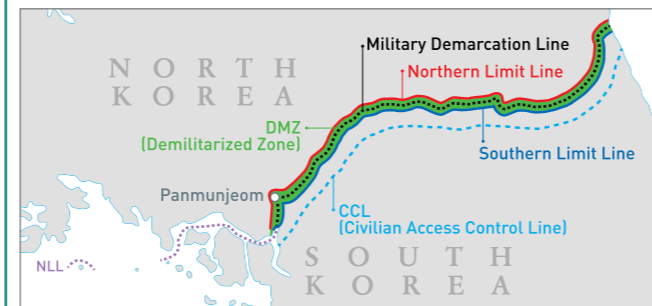

DMZ (Demilitarized Zone)

On July 27, 1953, the Korean War ended with a cease-fire. The Northern and Southern Limit Lines were created as each side moved their troops back 2 km from the Military Demarcation Line. The lines reach 248 km in length from Jeongdong-ri, Paju-si, to Myeongho-ri, Goseong-gun.

At present, an area within 2 km on both the north and south side is designated as the DMZ. Excluding the DMZ, the overall area is considered the most heavily militarized region in the world.

CCZ (Civilian Control Zone)

The southern and northern cease-fire lines of the DMZ are called the Southern Limit Line and the Northern Limit Line. The CCL was designated within a distance of 5-20 km from the Southern Limit Line of the DMZ to limit and control the entrance of civilians into the area to protect and maintain the security of military operations and facilities near the DMZ.

Attractions at DMZ Station

Imjingang river Observatory

You can see Jangdan Peninsula, Bukhansan Mountain, Gyeongui-Jungang Line, Freedom Bridge, Dokgae Bridge, and Imjingak Pavilion. Also featured are Dobo Bridge, Pyeonghwajeong Pavilion, and Imjingang Peace Lighthouse.

Gallery Greaves

Gallery Greaves was built by remodeling a bowling alley used by the US Second Infantry Division, which resided in Korea after the Korean War. With the theme of "Korean War: Time Lost, Time Regained," the exhibition displays various archival works entitled Daily Lives of People in the Midst of War, Dialogues Beyond Boundaries, Piece of Memory, Changes to Keep the Memories, Camp Greaves, and 1129 Days of the Korean War.
